

Mental health and substance use disorder services

Focusing on prevention, recovery, and resiliency

Carelon Behavioral Health understands the immense need for accessible mental health and substance use disorder (MH/SUD) treatment. Using a whole-health approach, our solutions enhance access to services and provide robust support.

How we help

Developed alongside providers, support organizations, policy makers, and state agencies, our coordinated system of care closes service gaps to deliver the best possible outcomes to the most urgent and complex mental health challenges individuals face.

- Whole-health approach
- Coordinated system of care
- Innovative support tools
- Peer recovery resources

Digital solutions including telehealth make care more accessible, reduce costs, and increase engagement in treatment.

What we offer

Our programs improve outcomes for members struggling with MH/SUD issues by combining decades of nationwide clinical expertise with expanded access to specialty behavioral health care.

- Clinical expertise. Staff clinicians and a broad provider network use tools like advanced analytics and reporting to identify high-risk members early and apply meaningful interventions before their MH/SUD issues worsen.
- Expanded access to specialty behavioral health care. From emerging concerns to complex conditions, our network provides expanded access to specialty care including opioid use disorder treatment, medication management, and long-term services and supports.
- Digital solutions. Digital solutions including telehealth make care more accessible, reduce costs, and increase engagement in treatment.
- Peer support. Peer support specialists with lived expertise provide added support and positively impact MH/SUD outcomes.
- Clinical, administrative, and financial value. Our programs address access challenges, rising costs, and increasing quality expectations. Ongoing analysis of trends and opportunities for system of care improvements ensure evidence-based utilization and cost-effective service delivery.
